Trouble rocks LP camp

Team Chiz, 'toxic' to Mar group, eased out

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

IN THE FINAL LEG OF the campaign, just when its top candidates are pulling away from the competition, the Liberal Party (LP) appears to be in turmoil.

Team Chiz, made up of the staff and supporters of Sen. Francis Escudero, has been eased out of the party campaign reportedly because of rising tensions between its principal and the LP vice presidential candidates, Sen. Manuel Roxas II.

A source from Team Chiz, who asked not to be named because of the sensitive nature of the subject, said Escudero was reorganizing and campaigning for LP standard-bearer Sen. Benigno "Ninoy" Aquino III, but not Roxas.

For his vice presidential candidate, Escudero has chosen junior lawyer, the running mate of Joseph Estrada, according to the source.

A Roxas ally called the Team Chiz-LP mix "toxic," that had to be purged.

Team Chiz had managed Aquino's media relations and strategy since the start of the campaign on Feb. 9. But the source said Escudero's "post" was told that it was being "purged."

Brownouts back in oven-hot Metro, Luzon

AS IF THE SEEDLING SUMMER was not enough, rotating brownouts are back in Metro Manila and Luzon, shutting down air-conditioners and electric fans that help people cope with the heat.

Manila Electric Co. (Meralco), the country's biggest power utility, said all cities and towns in its franchise area were affected by the outages yesterday as a result of the huge power supply deficit in the Luzon grid.

In Metro Manila, traffic in certain areas like the South Expressway as the Power Road, Ramona and Vito Cruz interchanges were particularly heavy. The traffic lights went down.

Meralco said it implemented two-hour rotating brownouts between 9:00 a.m. and 3:00 p.m. and between 4:00 p.m. and 9:00 p.m. in the whole of Metro Manila and in the provinces of Benguet, Bulacan, Cebu, Laguna, Pangasinan, Quezon and Rizal.

More tests sought on Turkish flour

By Cynthia Bakara and Miguel I. Pio

MANILA (AP) — PHILIPPINE INSPECTOR GENERAL called for more extensive tests on Turkish flour not only for the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) but also by independent laboratories.

After some time, the Philippine Association of Flour Millers (PFA) urged local bakers and noodle makers to continue using Turkish flour, pending the final results of the Food and Drug Administration's tests.

Flourmiller said the Department of Health (DOH) had clarified that the FDA had not yet finished its tests and that the sector would conduct further tests. In the meantime, Flourmiller urged the importers and users of Turkish flour to continue to use it as a food item, as it is a staple food item and its use is not a health concern.

Caution

In a statement issued yesterday, the flour millers said that since the FDA confirmed with certainty that Turkish flour did not contain any cancer-causing substances, bakers and noodle makers should just go on to use locally milled flour of those imported from other countries, which were of higher quality than Turkish flour.

The bakers and noodle producers do not usually use Turkish flour due to its poor quality. Local bakers and noodle makers, particularly those in the provinces, however, are used to using this flour due to its low price, not knowing that using Turkish flour can pose dangers to its consumers, the PFA statement read.

Studies made by local members of Incepin University said local bakers in Turkey have found cancer-causing agents in samples of Turkish flour. The authors of the study have warned that this compound can cause cancer if it is consumed in large amounts.

The Department of Health, however, stated that flour of these classes is not for the immediate consumption.

Flourmiller said that despite the warning of the FDA against Turkish flour, 10,000 metric tons of wheat flour from Turkey entered the country since the beginning of the year alone. Last year's Turkish flour imports reached 14,476 metric tons.

Among those importing Turkish flour are Midland, Long Life, Mountain View Flour, others, from International, Doral, General, and Specialized Management Asia Inc., General Manufacturing Corp., International Flour Mills, and San Jose Flouring.

Gambling on people's health

"It is not a 100 percent certain because we cannot gamble with our people's health," he said.

Concern over Turkish flour remains in the face of published reports that they are being sold everywhere in the country.

Given, a political friend of Turkish flour, had been brought in from Turkey with a manufacturing date of December 2009, an already high importation period of one year.

In continuing to use flour, Flourmiller urged the FDA to issue the urgency of its test samples by not allowing them to be imported until a decision is made on whether it is safe to use.

He said that the FDA could not give the government the information necessary to make a decision on whether it is safe to use the flour.

Comelec gets confidence vote from VP bets

By Michael Lim Llanos

MANILA (AP) — THE COMMISSION ON ELECTORAL (Comelec) preparations for the country's first-ever computerized elections may have been under pressure, but the vice-presidential candidates are giving the poll body a much-needed vote of confidence.

The credibility of the Comelec is still intact, according to the vice-presidential candidates who attended a forum on Tuesday organized by the Kingdom of Jesus Christ in the United States of America (KJCUA) in Manila.

The candidates and the poll body headed by Supreme Court Justice Jose Melo had the best intentions in carrying out preparations for the automation process, stating that the will of the people will be the guiding principle.

MAHINDIGUET and its coconut groves were the brunt of a direct calamity hit in 2004.

'REMING' BRUNT Coconut industry has yet to recover

By Gerald Sison R. Querobin
Bacolod, Marikina City

WHEN SUPER-TYPHOON "REMING" STRUCK MAHINDIGUET more than three years ago, the island province suffered from widespread devastation and nearly lost all its coconut trees.

Today, its 70,000 coconut farmers are still feeling the industry's brunt. Their plight made news nationwide with the plummeting prices of copra.

"With the low volume of harvests we harvest, compounded by the low prices of copra, we are losing huge already," said Reynato Malinao, 33, a farmer from Karamay Subdivision in Marikina City.

Malinao's family owns 6 hectares of coconut plantation. Before Reming came, they used to harvest 18 tons of copra, eight to nine times a year, and earn at least 90,000 per harvest.

"The more that we crop, more we are only 10,000 per harvest," Malinao lamented. The family harvests only three crops a year and 10 tons in three weeks per harvest.

Another farmer, Edgardo Oyo, 52, from Marikina City, said: "In these times, we are still waiting."

"For the past three years, we have been trying to recover in our daily financial needs. What we are waiting for is copra harvesting, but we are not getting it," Oyo said. "What we are getting is 100 per kilo of copra after the typhoon is now priced at only P1.50, he said.

"We do not see any increase in the volume of harvest this year," Oyo said. "What we are getting is 100 per kilo of copra after the typhoon is now priced at only P1.50, he said.

The price of copra, however, was not going any higher.

"We used to sell our copra at P2,000 per 100 kg in 2006, but now we are only at P1.50," said Reynato Malinao. He is a member of the 13th coconut growers' union in Bacolod.

Alternative livelihood
Oyo, a father of four, resorted to other means of income to complement his meager farm earnings.

He makes "salo de bato" (brown rice) and coconut milk and sells it to the public market and usually gets P500 per delivery. However, he works as a teacher in a schoolhouse. Although he is not paid in cash, he receives a portion of the salary for his services—and his family's need for a day. Any money must be sold to his neighbors.

"I do not need to depend on copra harvesting, it will not really meet our financial needs," Oyo said.

He, however, is looking for the worst. His daughter, a graduating high school student, will not likely come college in June if the price of copra continues to drop significantly. But Malinao, who also works in a farm, says he has no alternative job or livelihood to speak of. "I sometimes join some of my friends in their fishing boats, but my share of the catch is just enough for our food," he said.

It's a mess
Tullia Perez Lagos, officer in charge of the Philippine Coconut Authority (PCA) in Marikina, said the drought caused by the 13th typhoon weather phenomenon could make matters worse for the coconut industry.

"There will be less harvest of coconuts. The rain will be smaller in the bottom of the coconut flowers of the coconut will not properly mature," Lagos said.

Farmers will be feeling the effects of the 13th typhoon and the drought, she said. Last year, total harvest of coconuts based on PCA records was a meager 3.188 million tons, or lower than the 3.705 million tons harvested in 2008. The total harvest for the last two years was way below the yearly average of 25 million tons harvested in 2006.

In price value, the harvest of coconuts in 2009 amounted to only less than P20 billion—a far cry from the annual average of almost P220 billion based on eight last years per year between 2006 and when prices of copra fell lower.

Lagos said that of the 15,440 ha of coconut plantations in the province, only half of the trees had coconut ready for harvest at the end of December last year.

Moreover, half of the trees are already 50 years old and have been producing lower rates, she said.

Lagos said the majority of the farmers were not starting enough effort to tend their farms and to replace some trees to speed up rehabilitation. Typhoon-damaged coconut trees usually take five years to recover if properly tended.

The PCA has intensified its replanting and disease-suppression programs to lessen the financial brunt of the typhoon.

Wives on warpath: 'Manay' vs 'Manang'

"Manay" (the new wife) in the local business circle.

De Venera's husband, former politician and business speaker Don De Venera Jr., was his third and final wife in 2007 over 12½ years, former Dagupan Mayor Benjamin Lim.

The husband later set him aside in 2011 for the campaign as he was known by his true name of undercurrent, a reference for "viceroy king" in its negative sense.

Venera, a member of the White House club that owned Sanpangpang Flowers, hosted a television and radio program, "Napagbabait, Manay Kita."

Lim's family owns the huge through-CompuNet-Thompson and other northern Luzon provinces.

Surprise candidacy

Lim's candidacy came as a surprise to residents in the local congressional district.

He filed for certificate of candidacy (CoC) three hours before the deadline on Dec. 1 last year.

Sell earlier, former Philippine National Police chief Armin Llamina announced that he was withdrawing from the congressional race. This would have meant De Venera would easily succeed. However, De Venera filed his CoC for the position that his husband is running.

De Venera's supporters believed she was about to do this because she had made business plans to run inside before the deadline of the filing of CoC, while Lim is a retired physician, surgeon, and Lim's husband had served as the district representative and mayor of Dagupan.

Mayor's pit

De Venera said the district and business affairs of the fourth district had not been in her mind. She said she could not run for the district but her husband served for years.

While the former speaker's influence began in the district, his wife is not taking it easy. De Venera has been vigorously campaigning, campaigning with medical missions and feeding programs in the San Fabian, Bantayan, San Jacinto and Magallanes towns, said in Dagupan.

She also takes pride in her major projects where she was president of the Congressional Speakers Foundation, such as the Human for Health Home for Children and there for the elderly. While her exposure in other business and politics, De Venera is adept at contacting with associates of society.

Alternative choice

Lim, a nurse by training, has immersed herself in running the family's chain of shopping malls. "She is, in fact, the woman behind the success of Manay Group," her husband, Benjamin, said.

Turning for a political position was not her first choice, he said. "We were considering it, but I didn't want to go to the way."

"We have never decided to enter from politics, but with how different areas are in among that we cannot bring together and the fourth district (the right) to choose their leader. I hope people have an opportunity to give a choice," he said.

Benjamin, who is living in a suburban house in Alibon, Ilocos Sur, said he and his wife had decided to spend the rest of their lives in their own business, but they have to work very hard to get into it.

Lim is offering herself as an "alternative choice." But she said her husband agrees that they have to work very hard to get into it.

Page A11

ABC megawatts (MW), bigger than Manila's deficit of 340 MW and power outage, according to National Grid Corp. of the Philippines (NGCP).

Metro Manila and other parts of Luzon may continue to experience some or less than existing brownouts today as several power facilities are not operating.

After Energy Secretary Jose Manzano said the power situation would remain in Luzon by "next week or so."

Breakdown of fuel plant

NGCP said the supply shortage would be as severe as it is in the absence of a fuel at the 1,200-MW fuel coal-fired power plant in Pangasinan.

It said the fuel unit 2 broke down because of "technical problems." The fuel unit 2 has been out of operation since then.

After Energy, which operates the fuel power plant, said Unit 2 suffered mechanical problems on Monday morning that affected distribution of 600 MW to the Luzon grid.

"This is a big loss for the grid, but combined with the daily electricity demand of Luzon," said Gregg Remolada, head of Energy Management, said the situation is not as severe as it is.

Unusual conference

The "unusual" conference of events and not a power supply problem brought back meeting in Metro Manila and other parts of Luzon, according to Remolada.

"The power is there, the resources are there. It's just that some sort of supply issue," he said, saying that "something that can go wrong, will go wrong" has not been an effect," he said.

Energy officials have stopped movement of power plants in Luzon enough power supply on this day, he said.

Due to the change of the megawatt schedule, day later, some of the plants in Luzon "about the same time," including power reserves, Remolada said.

So there is an "unusual" situation," he said, saying that "something that can go wrong, will go wrong" has not been an effect," he said.

He said that unit 2 of two plants in Luzon, Pangasinan, was expected to return by yesterday.

dry or today.

It also did not help that two more units at the power plant brought down by 11 MW of fuel hydroelectric plants in Luzon.

"So it really is a combination of events as opposed to not having power," he said.

Fuel supply problems

The growing supply deficit can also be due to the lack of fuel of the Luzon power plant in Luzon province at its maximum capacity of about 230 MW due to fuel supply problems.

As of Wednesday, the Luzon power plant was generating only 60 MW NGCP said.

Low electricity

NGCP and the low demand at the moment in Luzon had cut down the generating capacity of the Luzon hydroelectric plant by two-thirds, equivalent to about 300 MW.

Out of the three power units, only one, which has a 180-MW generating capacity, was operating as of yesterday NGCP said.

The revenue from Luzon, which is the Luzon Grid, is expected to be a big loss for the Luzon Grid.

A power plant in Pangasinan is producing far less than its capacity due to technical problems.

The 200-MW fuel coal-fired hydroelectric plant in San Manuel town has been producing only 60 MW of electricity during peak hours.

Further worsening the supply situation is the planned maintenance shutdown of the 340-MW Pangasinan Unit 1 coal-fired power plant in Pangasinan, which is the 230-MW hydroelectric plant in San Manuel town has been producing only 60 MW of electricity during peak hours.

Brownout area

Energy officials would be monitoring the situation from May 9 to May 11—the critical days of the country's first annual election.

He gave the assurance that the country's power supply during these three critical days.

Some parts of Luzon may continue to suffer brownouts lasting five to eight hours after May 11, said Lim, when the power situation was expected to ease up. Reports from Don E. Remolada and Christine Remolada in Manila, National Grid and National Grid, said the situation was expected to ease up.

ANTIGOVERNMENT Red Shirts were their red flag after snatching into the Thai Parliament compound on Wednesday. They later withdrew from the building but seemed to snuff out their protests in force more elections.

Red Shirts storm Thai Parliament

BANGKOK—EMBOULDENED AN-tigovernment protesters briefly stormed Thailand's Parliament building on Wednesday as lawmakers traded words to free and a Black Hawk helicopter evicted VIPs trapped by the onerous crowd, officials said.

"Red Shirts" protesters led by one of their lawmakers snatched through the Parliament compound gate with a truck and rushed to the second floor while Deputy Prime Minister Suthej Thongpan and other lawmakers were still inside. But the protesters later withdrew from the building at the request of opposition lawmakers.

The government security agency, known as Cops, sent a Black Hawk helicopter carrying five soldiers armed with M-16 rifles over the Parliament building to pick up senators and lawmakers trapped inside, the agency said in a statement. But television said the law was among those rescued.

The Red Shirts, who have been camped in Bangkok since March 13, say they will continue protests until Prime Minister Abhisit Vejjajiva dissolves Parliament and calls new elections.

Abhisit, who left Parliament before the break-in to attend a scheduled meeting, has awarded a trip to Washington in April 12-13 international justice summit.

The Red Shirts virtually have had the run of the city since Tuesday, when police and military troops made little effort to block their from taking up, scattered rallies through central Bangkok.

The Red Shirts movement, known locally as the United Front for Democracy Against Dictatorship, recently Abhisit came to power abruptly in the year-end vote on Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra.

was removed in a 2008 coup on corruption allegations. The group's leading figure of Thaksin supporters and pro-democracy activists who opposed the policy.

In an incident reflecting unwillingness of security forces to get tough, a rifle-battle between a lawmaker from a pro-Thaksin party and a soldier carrying an M-16.

The lawmaker shouted at the soldier, "This is the Parliament. Why are you carrying a gun?" and then showed the soldier out of the building where Red Shirts would later in the ground and snuff out the rally and a protest. The protesters then turned the gun near to a soldier.

The storming of the Parliament was led by Anuman Rongviratong, one of the most radical group leaders who last year orchestrated the takeover of a major television, leaving the resignation of Abhisit to be by helicopter and boat.

Abhisit has been under pressure to use force to restore order. But on Tuesday, he indicated by government's gentle approach against unruly demonstrators reflected major tests and pushed through times of adversity.

Abhisit and a brief TV address that the government "based on security measures to ensure that no constitutional or legal act of control" and said the situation is "quite" "beyond monitoring."

Many Thai lawmakers and officials on Wednesday questioned whether Abhisit was losing his symbolic endorsement with the protesters and the crucial backing of the military and police. In last four years, prime minister played in step into the fray in an attempt to negotiate to end the crisis, state media reports said.

"If I were the prime minister, I would have got rid of those who would not carry out my orders," said a former head of the National Security Council, Prawit Wongsuwan, who said there was strong support for the Red Shirts within the civil service and law-enforcement agencies.

Local lawmakers have complained that the business community have not done enough to help, and lawmakers have said they have been under threat.

The authorities moved thousands of troops in last year on Tuesday to confront the demonstrators at their campsite in the middle of Bangkok's main and shopping district. The protesters had been banned from 13 main areas, but they staged past times of soldiers and police to provide necessary daily normal.

A rule of violence around the Thai House of Representatives, with Red Shirts and lawmakers playing the role of a "war" in the Thai House.

The English-language Thai Voice, said in its Wednesday's front-page editorial, that Thailand was "arguably the best day in its history" for the Red Shirts and definitely the worst day for the prime minister.

Now, for the first time, the prime minister must have started questioning the loyalty of the police and even in the military, the editorial said.

Chairman Rongviratong, one of the country's most powerful lawmakers, called the situation "a game of hide-and-seek."

Prices of key manufactured goods fell in Feb., NSO says

By Associated Press
 Prices of key manufactured goods fell in February, according to a report from the National Statistical Office (NSO) on Wednesday. The report shows that the price index for manufactured goods fell 0.1% in February from the previous month. This was the first time in 12 months that the price index for manufactured goods has fallen. The NSO says that the price index for manufactured goods is a key indicator of the health of the economy. A fall in the price index for manufactured goods could indicate that demand for manufactured goods is weak, which could lead to a slowdown in economic growth.

Meralco eyes increase in distribution charges

By Ben N. Sison

Barilbas seeks provisional authority to implement fee change

MANILA, Philippines—Meralco is seeking provisional authority from the Energy Regulatory Commission (ERC) to increase its distribution charges starting July 1, 2010. The company's request for a 1.5% increase in its distribution charges was filed with the ERC on June 10, 2010. Meralco's request is based on the company's cost of service study for the period 2009-2010. The company's cost of service study shows that its distribution charges are currently 1.5% below the ERC's approved rates.
